

CONVERSATION GUIDE: TALKING TO YOUR DOCTOR ABOUT PANCREATIC CANCER

It can be difficult to speak with a doctor about pancreatic cancer. Symptoms are often vague and hard to describe, and talking about risk factors and family history may not be easy. And, because there is no standard early detection test, talking to your doctor can help catch pancreatic cancer early before it spreads, which means more treatment options.

You should always feel comfortable and supported by your healthcare team. PanCAN strongly recommends seeking a healthcare team that meets your physical, mental and emotional needs.

Understanding symptoms, risk factors and family history is the first step to feeling more confident. Use this guide to help you gather any thoughts and questions and start a conversation with your healthcare team.

KNOW THE SYMPTOMS

People with pancreatic cancer typically experience vague symptoms, which could be confused with many other abdominal or gastrointestinal issues. Circle any symptoms you're experiencing and discuss them with your care team:

KNOW THE RISK FACTORS

Although the exact causes of pancreatic cancer are not yet well understood, research studies have identified certain risk factors. Check all that apply to you:

- I am over 60 years old
- I have chronic or hereditary pancreatitis
- I am a smoker
- I am obese
- I have had diabetes for more than 5 years
- I have a family history of pancreatic cancer

If you have a family history of pancreatic, breast, ovarian cancer or melanoma, let your care team know, as all these diseases may share common genetic syndromes.
